%	%	%

Details: Assignments include 10% class participation, 10% tutorial, 10% workbook assignments, and 30% homework and compositions. Quizzes/tests include 10% midterm exam (oral and written). Final exam (oral and written) is worth 30%.

NOTE: The following sections may vary by instructor. Please see course syllabus available from the instructor.

Typical Instructional Methods (Guest lecturers, presentations, online instruction, field trips, etc.)

The class is conducted in French with students working together in pairs and small groups. In addition to regular classroom activities students are to work with computerized multimedia programs. Composition skills are developed by the writing and rewriting of two short essays.

In addition to class work, students meet once a week with a native speaker in small tutorials, i.e. conversation groups of six to seven people. Activities vary and include practising various structures as well as discussion and role play. A feature length film will be viewed and discussed in French.

Texts and Resource Materials (Include online resources and Indigenous knowledge sources. Open Educational Resources (OER) should be included whenever possible. If more space is required, use the Supplemental Texts and Resource Materials form.)

Course Content and Topics

This is a one-semester course independent of FREN 225, but linked to FREN 215, its companion course. The first five chapters of Encore will be studied in FREN 215; the last five will be studied in FREN 216. The two courses may be studied as separate modules. We present thematic readings, cultural information, contextualized comprehension, grammar, and vocabulary exercises, followed by more open-ended activities. The related Cahier exercises contain many written activities to emphasize correct structures. There are also websites to visit, suggested video and film viewings.

Discussions and essays in French will promote the development of vocabulary and critical thinking about controversial contemporary topics such as ecology, the environment, cloning, biotechnology, and genetic engineering.

Readings include short stories such as La Chasse-galerie, articles from Châtelaine, La Presse, Le Soleil, Magazine Santé, La Rotonde and others.
