Centre for Indo-Canadian Studies at the University of the Fraser Valley

Vision

The Centre for Indo-Canadian Studies (CICS) is the University of the Fraser Valley's (UFV) nexus point where scholars and students from UFV programs, community members as well as groups from all sectors of the community and international visitors come together to develop the study of the Indian sub-continent and the Indian Diaspora. The Centre supports the development, maintenance, and strengthening of linkages that lead to diverse experiences for students, faculty and community. The Centre also initiates and supports India-Canada studies, and programs and activities that promote the study of and engagement with the Indian sub-continent and the Indo Canadian Diaspora. The research arm of the Centre supports faculty associates of CICS to undertake research in their special areas as well as being responsive to broader research needs as they arise. The Centre is a hub and repository of the pioneering history of the Indo-Canadian Diaspora while assisting in the development of much-needed research that benefits members of the community, government, and the many facets of academia. The Centre is also the home of the BC Regional Innovation Chair on Canada-India Business and Economic Development.

Core Programs:

- India-Canada Studies program
- The BC Regional Innovation Chair on Canada-India Business and Economic Development
- Developing and sustaining academic, business, and community partnerships
- Conducting research, holding forums, and consultations on various social, cultural and historical issues
- Support for UFV-wide initiatives that enhance the vision of the Centre

Goals:

The Centre for Indo-Canadian Studies identified four major goals that it pursued through the years 2010 and 2011:

1. UFV and community activities
2. Student, faculty engagement and stakeholder relationships
3. Research and consultations
4. Resources and administration

To meet these goals, the CICS has relied on several inter-related strategies and one of the most effective strategies was to always strive to involve as many students, faculty, and members of the community as possible in the activities of the Centre. In the last two years, the Centre has involved 55 students as work-study students, in leadership roles, as research assistants or as coordinators of events, activities, and programs. Centre Associates are involved in research projects, study tours, curriculum planning, presentations and activities with the Centre. The community has participated in activities of the Centre and in giving advice and support. The media has consistently sought the views of staff at the Centre when related stories have broken or are being analyzed and the Centre strives to provide a balanced and objective view on current events. The Centre's finances have been enhanced by research grants, government funding, and community fundraising.

Future plans:

1. Ongoing enhancement of the Centre's financial resources
2. Undertaking relevant and pertinent research
3. Strengthening and enhancing the India-Canada Studies program
4. Continuing to engage faculty, students, staff, and community in the work of the Centre

India-Canada Studies program

The India-Canada Studies program started out with a few courses in 2004. The multi-disciplinary program has grown exponentially since then and in the last few years it has matured in breadth and offerings. Starting out with History, Social Work, and English, the program now includes courses in Geography, Anthropology, Philosophy, Religious Studies, Cultural and Media Studies, and Modern Languages. As the program grew over the years and as the interest in the courses grew, new faculty were hired, study tours were undertaken to India, academic exchanges were developed, student internships were initiated, and much more. In September 2008, the brand new and unique India-Canada Studies certificate was launched. Students now have the added opportunity to graduate with a concentration certificate that will assist them in their career and further education pursuits. Students are benefiting from a rich, vibrant, and interesting certificate program that incorporates a wide range of disciplines. In Canada, it is a unique offering that will draw many prospective students to UFV.
